Narrative:

Gift Boxes are how Jetty provides fun RadQuest rewards to users. They contain both Elements and Energy Cards. The results are a little random, but different levels of Gift Box generally have a better or worse range of stuff.

Gift Box levels:

- Simple (containing a common or rare card, a few elements)
- Fancy (containing a common, rare, or ultra-rare card, and more elements)
- Elite (containing only a rare or ultra-rare card, and even more elements)

Game mechanic:

The user generally gets a Gift Box at the end of each quest. There are different levels of boxes, but all boxes of a certain level are the same (they are fungible tokens in fact). Each level of Gift Box is its own resource.

Users can go to Jetty to open a Gift Box. Each one returning one random Energy Card and a random number of Elements.

Each Gift Box level has an associated min/max for the number of Elements it returns. When opened, the number of Elements returned is generated within that range.

Each Gift Box level has a defined weighting for how often it drops common/rare/ultra-rare cards. When opened, the rarity of the card is selected first based on the weighting, and then a card is randomly picked within that rarity to return.

At any given time, this selection is done using a defined table of Energy Cards, and their rarity, that are currently available, which may change due to limited editions Cards.
